The Bloomsbury Park Carousel, Raleigh.
"The Electric Park Amusement Company opened Bloomsbury Park on July 4, 1912. It was located at the end of the streetcar line near the Carolina Country Club, off what is today Glenwood Avenue in Raleigh, NC. It featured electric lights, a dance pavilion, a boating pond, penny arcade, roller coaster, and a magnificent Denzel carousel. Bloomsbury closed in 1921, and the carousel was sold to Pullen Park, where remains today"

Message from the Editor

Diane L Richard
Editor, Wake Treasures

WELCOME TO THIS EDITION OF WAKE TREASURES

Dear Readers,

In this issue we continue a few transcription series where the initial pieces were published a few years back. Apologies for the delay! Included are some more 1802 Tax Lists, Petitions found in General Assembly Session Records and documents regarding Slaves and Free Negroes.

Figure 1 -- "Rex Hospital, Raleigh, N.C." in Durwood Barbour Collection of North Carolina Postcards (P077), NC Collection Photographic Archives, Wilson Library, UNC-Chapel Hill, https://dc.lib.unc.edu/cdm/singleitem/collection/ncpost/id/3495/rec/5

Debra Blake, Section Head, Collection Services, State Archives of North Carolina, continues to share with us the history, nuances, and records of value to genealogists held in the archives. This time she talks about the medical profession and associated records. We have re-packaged, as they say, her regular features under the moniker "Archival Adventures." After all, any time spent exploring records is typically an adventure.

Phil Upchurch continues to share vignettes about Wake County people and places with us. Starting with this issue, these vignettes are part of a series titled "A Wake County Native Reflects." In this issue, learn about the Caraleigh Phosphate & Fertilizer Works.

As promised, or threatened, as they say, there is a piece authored by your editor about the now gone Milburnie Dam. Learn about its rich history and explore a photograph album showing the dam before, during, and after its removal.

We continue our recent series of pre-1913 birth records. We are fortunately that the City of Raleigh was an early adopter of documenting births and deaths in the city. Let's explore the year 1892.

For something new, we share some entries from an 1880s livery stable ledger. There are many interesting details you can learn about its customers. These records also provide insight into what kinds of services a livery stable provided from stabling horses to rental carriages and much more.

Diane

Livery Stable Accounts

Transcribed by Ginger Mann
Introduction by Donna Shackle and Diane L. Richard

[Source: Collection Number: 02916z, Livery Stable Account Books, 18851889, Wilson Library, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, NC]

This transcription for the years 1885 -- 1889 includes two sets of ledgers for livery stables in Raleigh. While one ledger is labeled, the other is not; both are included here. The unlabeled ledger gives not only patrons names and their charges, but also the reason for each charge. This can give us a tremendous amount of information about individuals, especially before 1913 when vital records were instituted, and newspaper notices were inconsistent.

While marriage licenses/registers started in 1868, this doesn't mean that all marriage records survive. We can tell that Dr. Thomas E. Skinner hired a carriage on the 14th of November 1886, presumably to attend the noted wedding. Also, he seems to be affiliated with St. Mary's church, indicating a possible religion for him, as he hired a carriage to that destination twice. In August of the same year, Dr. Skinner hired a carriage to a depot and there are charges for handling his baggage as well, indicating he took or sponsored a trip that month. Other names reappear, and we can infer more information from their entries.

Dr. E. Burke Haywood[1] is a familiar name to readers as he is mentioned several times in past issues; he also appears in both livery ledgers We find him previously listed as an attending physician at the birth of several infants and as a registered voter in multiple elections. We can now add to what is known about him by reviewing his ledger entries. It appears he stabled several animals over time.

You will find below an index as included in the ledgers as well as sample entries from the ledger. If you find an index entry for which no additional information is provided, please consult the original.

Records Related to the Medical Profession in the State Archives of North Carolina

Debra Blake[2]

Within the holdings of the State Archives, materials related to the medical profession are varied. Doctors, dentists, and most hospitals are private businesses, therefore, one should not expect to find their records in a government archives. And yet records related to medical subjects abound in the holdings!

To be precise the records are unlikely to be medical records of individuals and more likely to be the business records of doctors or medical organizations. Regardless, the State Archives has many different types of records of a medical nature. Examples include reminiscences of the yellow fever epidemic of 1862 in Wilmington, coroners' inquests into mysterious deaths, and a 1785 General Assembly petition of a doctor's vow of loyalty. There may be restricted materials in any record group containing medical information, but when such is the case, there are clear indications in the various published guides, the finding aid, and the exterior of the box. The restrictions could be imposed by either state or federal statute.

Within the State Agency record group are records of the Department of Human Resources (now Department of Health and Human Services), which includes several different series of records, such as the Board of Health and the Division of Mental Health, Mental Retardation, and Substance Abuse. The Guide to State Agency Records in the North Carolina State Archives will have a breakdown of the records available and there are more detailed finding aids in the Search Room. Researchers should be creative when thinking about possible agencies' records that could contain medical or health-related information. An example is the Division of Water Resources which includes records related to stream pollution and the Department of Public Instruction includes some materials related to the health and well-being of students. Such records do not deal with individuals but health in a broad sense.

Various boards and commissions include records related to physicians, dentists and other medical professionals. Examples are Board of Chiropractic Examiners, Board of Dental Examiners, Board of Embalmers and Funeral Directors, Board of Osteopathic Examination and Registration, and the like. Most of the records for these types of organizations date from the early part of the 20th century to the late 1960s and consist of board minutes, correspondence and, sometimes, registers. The Board of Nursing also includes scrapbooks.

The records of the Supreme Court are full of cases involving medical professionals or procedures. The online catalog will pull up several of them, but to really do a thorough search, a researcher should turn to the North Carolina Digest for a list of cases, available in the Search Room, as well as many large libraries. There is also a small card catalog in the Search Room which gives the names of the litigants and case number for cases up to 1909.

The county records also have numerous types of materials related to medicine as well. Frequently there are registers, or certificates of registration for physicians and surgeons. The Miscellaneous Records series can include coroners' inquests, as well as lunacy records. The later series is only available when the records are 100 years old. Another record type found in Miscellaneous Records and not obviously medical is that of Jury Records. These records are often letters to the court asking to be excused from jury service. Many of them report illnesses, both that of the prospective juror, himself, as well as his family. Some are from doctors who wish to be excused so that they can tend to patients. Within the microfilmed Miscellaneous Records can be found county boards of health minutes and commissioners' minutes. These most often date from the early 20th century to the late 1960s. Mentions of any epidemics or serious health issues within communities will find their way into these important and underused records. For the available records of any county, the card catalog in the Search Room and the Guide to County Records in the North Carolina State Archives can be consulted.

The State Archives is the custodian for many organizations' records, some of which are medical in nature. Finding aids for each organization are found in a series of black binders located in the Search Room. Examples of these records are Dorothea Dix School of Nursing Related Papers, 1905-1951; Good Samaritan Hospital, Inc. (Charlotte, NC), Minutes and General Records, 1891-1960; and North Carolina Medical Society Alliance Records, 1922-1999.

The record group likely to contain the most medical records is the Private Collections. This group contains family papers and account books and both types of records are replete with records of physicians. As mentioned before, these are more likely to be business records rather than patient records. Peripheral to that type of record are the many home remedies for illnesses and accidents that are found in recipe books and plantation records within this large record group. The Guide to Private Manuscript Collections in the North Carolina State Archives contains short descriptions of those private collections in custody at the time of the book's publication in 1981. The index entries under medicine are voluminous and varied. It would be a mistake to check only the term "medical", even though aspects of that term cover an entire column within the index. Savvy researchers will check terms such as midwives, physicians, diseases, epidemics, pharmacists, North Carolina Board of Health, North Carolina State Sanatorium for the Treatment of Tuberculosis, and public health, just to mention a few. Once it is determined from the Guide that there is a collection of interest, the more in-depth finding aid can be consulted for specific information. These can be found in the black binders in the Search Room. Finding aids for some of the newer collections can also be found on the Archives' website. Private collections of papers, just by their very nature are varied and those containing medical information, or created by medical professionals, are no different. There are several account books kept by physicians, as well as journals and diaries. Some collections contain letters that mention physicians or illnesses or are from physicians themselves speaking about their own experiences with various diseases. Researchers of Harnett County will be gratified to note that PC 211, the Arthur T. Wyatt Collection contains a medical history of the county up to 1940 that includes lists of doctors. A day book (PC 1075) kept by Dr. Samuel Jordan Wheeler of Murfreesboro mentions patients individually and tracks the development and progression of his own final illness. A true wealth of information is included in PC 1346, Dr. Thomas Fanning Wood Papers, as he was the first secretary of the state's Board of Health. This large collection contains very specific information about individuals and subjects of interest to him, and broad studies of certain health-related topics. And finally, for those truly not faint of heart, there is PC 1526, the Dr. Wiley D. Forbus Manuscript, which is a nearly 1000-page manuscript on the history of medicine in North Carolina, dating from 1524-1960. The comprehensive volume also includes a list of doctors in the state from 1663-1850.

For genealogists with medical people in their background or people interested in medical topics it may be surprising to see the wealth of materials available in the State Archives of North Carolina. Researchers may have to dig through finding aids and collections to make singular discoveries, but singular discoveries can be made.

Once there was Milburnie Dam

Diane L. Richard

One of my "go to" places for walking is the Neuse River Greenway Trail[4]. It's not too far from my house and different every time I visit. Last fall when there, I noticed that some of that bright orange barricade fencing was up by the buildings located at the Milburnie Dam. This was the beginning of the end of the dam frequently enjoyed during my walks.

Here is a bit of its tale … a location deeply rooted in Wake County history.

History

The above plaque along the walkway near the dam gives you a bit of the history of this historic area used for crossing the Neuse. Basically, since the 1700s, there has been some form of crossing here – ferry, wooden bridge, iron bridge, and then nothing as the crossing point shifted to I-64, just down the river a bit. Think of how many people, both those living in Wake County, and those traversing the county have crossed in this location.

Though hard to see, you can still sometimes still see the old Iron Bridge supports through the underbrush.

Just downstream from this location is where Milburnie Dam stood. A dam was first built here in the mid-1800s and then the version I'm familiar with was build around 1900. Different businesses have operated at the location – hydroelectric plant, grist mill, and then another hydroelectric plant; all inactive by the time of my first trek to visit the area.

According to the Final Report -- "Cultural Resource Investigations for the Milburnie Dam Mitigation Bank Project, Wake County, North Carolina, North Carolina, Environmental Review (ER) #06-3114, Lead Federal Agency - US Army Corps of Engineers Action ID SAW-2010-0020"[5]

> Milburnie Dam was constructed between 1900 and 1903 with granite blocks from the former ca. 1853-1855 Neuse Manufacturing Company papermill that reportedly had been burned by Federal troops in April 1865. The ca. 1853-1855 papermill dam was described in 1880 as being "... 8 ft high and race 150-ft long" (Trowbridge 1885:51-53). In 1883, the North Carolina Geological Survey reported that "Milburny" has "... an open-frame dam across the river, eight feet high and 250-ft long, built on the site of the old dam ..." (NCGS 1883).

There is a detailed historic overview in the above report, pages 21-27, and includes some neat newspaper references to the area and the various means used to get across the Neuse River.

Research also found that several bridges have been built in the Milburnie area beginning in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth century. The earliest reference was found on the Price-Strother map from 1798. Later references include newspaper articles starting in the early nineteenth century. The Weekly Raleigh Register from September 5, 1803, page 3, announced the bidding on building a bridge over the Neuse River at Major John Hinton's (Figure 8) and four years later (August 20, 1807) there was another announcement in the Weekly Raleigh Register about the building of the bridge also at Major John Hinton's on the Neuse River (Figure 9).

Before

As mentioned, this is a place where I've frequently walked. Between the dam, the nearby pond, flora and fauna, it's always tranquil and ever changing.
Please note that most of my walks are at dusk … always trying to balance seeing the flora and increasing my chance to see fauna (in this case deer who are corpuscular) or beavers (whom we always only catch in the early evening); hence the pink tinge and darkness of many of the photos.

During

Then, one day in the fall, it all changed. Orange barricade fencing was put up, land previously grown over was cleared and change was in the air.
The dam was coming down. See the Resources section below for several news articles about "why" the dam was coming down and about the process to tear it down.

Because of this construction, this was the first time “before” the dam came down that I was able to walk behind the abandoned and crumbling old hydroelectric building and the dam itself.

This was my last visit before the dam started to be removed … the sun was setting, literally and figuratively on Milburnie Dam as a landmark.

After

The dam is now gone. Here are images of it immediately after the removal and then some six months later, after the area had been spruced up, trees planted, and more people were seen in the area fishing, even if I didn't photograph them <grin!>. Many trees have been planted, an engraved stone now announces the "restored" falls, and flowers adorn what once was a concrete pad for the hydroelectric plant.

Conclusion

I've not often seen a "piece" of history taken down in my lifetime.

I suspect this has happened time and again all across Wake County. Have you, like me, stumbled across some history near where you live or play? Though I have no family roots south of Massachusetts, I do love history, a passion I suspect many of you share.

So, learning about local history is always on my list.

Please consider writing a piece about a Wake County location, resident, or local piece of history. Those of us that live in the area, can be the eyes and ears for those who don't live here and yet whose ancestors lived, worked, played, worshipped, and traveled where we now venture.

bills of indictment were preferred & found against a certain William Speight, late of Wake aforesaid, for having pafsed three four counterfeit dollars.— The trials being postponed to the succeeding term, the said William applied to your petitioners, who were then at the Court, to become sureties for his appearance.
Your petitions, moved by no motive but humanity, relying on the good character which the said William had borne, and believing him to be innocent of the charges alleged against him, entered into recognizances, each in the sum of Three hundred pounds upon each indictment; making the aggregate Twelve hundred pounds to each of your petitioners. That the said William made his appearance at Court on the first day of the succeeding term, and your petitioners do confidently hope & believe that he wou'd not depart the same without leave; but, contrary to his positive afsurances & to the reasonable expectation of your petitioners, he did depart secretly before his trials came on, and carried with him all the personal property he pofsefsed.— The recognizances were therefore forfeited, and writs of Scire [?] facias sued [?] out against your petitioners; upon which, judgments have since been obtained for the sums aforesaid, with costs. Your petitioners have never seen the said William since his elopement, but they have understood...

Your petitioners do unequivocably declare, that they have never received, directly or indirectly, any kind of indemnification, or the promise of any, either from the said William or any other person; nor do they entertain the smallest hope of ever getting any kind of recompense for the said judgments or any part thereof;— They know of no property owned by the said William, except that which he carried with him, and a poor tract of land lying in the County of Wake, insufficient to discharge his own forfeiture; and they know him to be much involved in debt. Your petitioners have long been acquainted with the said William; and, until the time of committing the fact herein stated, they have never heard aught alleged against his honesty— his character stood perfectly fair. Your petitioners are aware, that [a?] general rule to relieve sureties, wou'd have the [e?]effect of oppugning the public justice of the [S?]urety; but they humbly conceive that the peculiar [h?]ardship of this case entitles them to some claim [fr]om the clemency of your Honorable body.—

A Wake County Native Reflects

Gathering My Thoughts About the Caraleigh Phosphate & Fertilizer Works in Wake County, North Carolina

Bred and born in Wake County, North Carolina in 1928, I came to learn many things about the fertilizer plant that was established about 1890. It was on the east side of Rhamkatte Road (now Lake Wheeler Road) abutting the village of Caraleigh and on the north bank of Walnut Creek. But my most vivid memory of the Works came on a pleasant day about 1936 at about age 8. My father, Robert Jefferson Upchurch, had reasons to travel from our small farm on Holly Springs Road (now Tryon Road) to the City of Raleigh. The trip was by mule and wagon, and I accepted his invitation to ride along. Reaching our destination, we stabled the mules at a livery facility not far from the city center. With business complete, we commenced our three-hour wagon ride home. When we reached the abandoned Phosphate Mill, I was allowed to roam the still standing, abandoned two-story office building. On the second floor I found numerous abandoned ledger books. I took several with me and placed them in the loft of our barn. On rainy days I would, in solitude, examine the pages of entries in these books. I remember nothing of the contents, but what a historic treasure these books would be today if I but had the foresight to preserve them.

As the years went by and especially as I became fascinated by local and family history, I came to know more about the Works. There was even a family connection.

My great-uncle, William George Upchurch, brother of my grandfather Bartley Jefferson Upchurch, was a mover and shaker in the City of Raleigh prior to his early death in 1895. He was a principal in the formation of the Works and also for the nearby Caraleigh Cotton Mill. I learned that Joseph R. Chamberlain, agricultural expert, was an early manager of the works. He had been recruited from the fledging North Carolina State College of A and E (now university) when he had been the first professor of agriculture. Years later I was to receive two degrees from this institution and to serve as a professor there. Naturally I was pleased to learn about the history of Professor Chamberlain.

In the 1940s while 'possum hunting with my bachelor Uncle Gettis Henderson Upchurch, I learned that he had been employed at the Works for a year in about 1906. I was amiss in not probing for more details.

There was yet one more connection. About 1927 the Works was still operational, and a slick brochure touting the establishment was produced. The brochure featured two photos of a farmer, actually my grandfather, and then proceeded to further define the Works. The back story is that Grandfather and Uncle Bill (WGU) since 1970 had owned Woodland, the Rhamkatte farm where my father and I had been born. (Rhamkatte occupies the northern half of Swift Creek Township.) Uncle Bill was an absent partner but took great pride in Woodland being a show farm in the late 1800s. While Uncle Bill had been long deceased, the connection of the brothers no doubt led to the picture in the brochure. It holds another reminder for me. The farmer behind the fertilizer bag I came to know as Percy Cotton, an African American who farmed near us in the 1930s. I often visited in his home and was a playmate of his son Horace.

There is yet another back story to the creation of the Works. In the 1850-1880 era, agriculturalists began to understand that fertilizer was needed to grow good crops on soils in Wake and other counties that had become depleted. This led to unprincipled companies selling bagged sand with minimum fertilizer content. It was this fraud that led the North Carolina Legislature to charge the North Carolina Department of Agriculture to mandate standards for fertilizer backed up by chemical analysis. The formulations of an Ag college were not far behind. It was during the maelstrom of these events that the need for reputable manufacturing facilities became apparent. It is my belief that Caraleigh Phosphate Works was such an entity.

It must have been sometime in the early 1930s when the Works failed and burned. I remember it as a desolate, barren 50 acre tract with acid residue that would not allow anything to grow. In years to come, entrepreneurs would manage to make the area useful again.
