Message From the Editor

Diane L Richard
Editor, Wake Treasures

WELCOME TO THIS EDITION OF WAKE TREASURES

Dear Readers,

This issue of the journal is somewhat bittersweet for me. After countless number of years at the helm, not meaning to be disingenuous and I honestly don't know, and many more before behind the scenes, this is my last issue as editor. I have loved the journey and the challenge to try and provide helpful content to readers. And, it's time for me to slay a few other dragons. As time passes, I have become busier and slower and that is not the most effective combination. With the next issue, Donna Shackle will be your new editor. She introduces herself below.

With this issue we continue to share the stories of Philip Upchurch and Carey Faison and their Wake County families. We are so fortunate that Raleigh was one of the first places in North Carolina to collect vital records, well before the state mandated such. We share with you some birth records from 1895 provided through the efforts of a Cary DAR chapter. We continue our exploration of tax records, this time for the year 1802. Tax records are invaluable in information about our family members, their holdings and their community. Sue Harvey introduces us to a church important to her family.

Best wishes to y'all wherever your genealogical journey may take you. I'll still be connected to WCGS, just not via the journal.

Diane

Many thanks to Diane for her years of dedication to the journal, and best wishes slaying those dragons!

I'm Donna Shackle, an Alaskan mama of two great teens. I'm also a professional genealogist. Due to my husband's career, we moved to Wake County from England a few years ago. We love it here and are happy to finally be able to put down roots. My own ancestry includes many in North Carolina, but none yet in Wake County, although I'm always hoping to discover a connection.

For the last two years I have been the assistant editor of Wake Treasures and am looking forward to my first edition as editor. You may notice some changes in the upcoming issues, and I hope you all will like what you see. To keep the journal rolling, please consider contributing – there are many volunteer opportunities for all skill levels.

Until the next issue,
Donna

Beginnings of Olive Chapel Baptist Church

Sue Prince Harvey[1]

Horse Racing, Geese, and a New Church

In November 1850 a group of neighbors met to form a church. The nearest church was Shady Grove in what is now Bonsal. The reasons to organize were two-fold. The distance to Shady Grove presented an issue, and with a new railroad being planned near the community from Raleigh to Hamlet. "The Raleigh to Gaston RR was now operating as North Carolina's first RR". The RR would bring the youth near to the outside world and exposure to evil influences.

The ridge between Wake and Chatham Counties that made up this community was a site for a horse race tract, gander pulling and betting. The race tract was between "Cotton's Cross Roads and New Ruin" which had a Tavern. This was part of the" Durham to Fayetteville Road". Along the road between Cotton's Cross Road and New Ruin is the intersection of Smithfield and Fayetteville roads. This area made up what is now Olive Chapel, Friendship and New Hill communities.

Elder Johnson Olive was voted as first moderator. (How the name olive chapel was chosen is not stated but may have been from the name of the first moderator.) Elder Johnson Olive is the grandson of James Olive who was born in England (1713- 1720?) James left a hard apprentice master in the leather trade in England and arrived in New York City 1740. James made his way to Raleigh NC, worked for a year in tools and leather, then bought land near Raleigh and then on the "ridge between Wake and Chatham counties."

This information is taken from a book I found in my mom's home. Rev. Garland Hendricks wrote the book "Biography of a Country Church".1950. The book includes names of many of the original families from this area, many of whom are my ancestors. The most surprising information was of the popularity of this race track. It began as farmers would race their work horses. Then farmers began to breed horses just for racing. Outsiders began to race their prized horses. Therefore, betting became popular. Also, a game of Gander Pulling[2] was done where horsemen would race and try to be the first to grab a goose by the neck that was hung up by the feet. Wow this was a wild place!!

Growing up this was a quiet farm and church community… The Church must have had a good influence. I have fond memories here. Many of my ancestors are buried in the Olive Chapel Cemetery.

Railroads, Hortons, and Faisons

Carey Faison

Part 1: Rufus Henry Horton , Wake County Railroad Engineer Extraordinaire

This is the first part of a story of a railroad in Wake County, the Raleigh & Gaston Railroad, and some of the people from two families, named Horton and Faison, who worked for the railroad starting with Rufus Henry Horton. But first, a little background.

In the early 1800's, when the industrial revolution finally spread into the west and south, the idea of a steam-propelled machine became more and more exciting because of the technological and financial successes. In 1830, the Petersburg (Virginia) Railroad had obtained a charter from the state of Virginia and the following year also from North Carolina, allowing opening a road from Petersburg south to Garysburg, NC. It was amended three years later to extend the road to Weldon, NC. Construction on the Raleigh and Gaston railroad started in 1836 at Gaston in Northampton County on the first 40-mile segment beginning with a bridge across the Roanoke River. Construction was to be completed at Raleigh – about 85 miles away.[1]

The first train entered Raleigh on 21 March 1840 to cheering and celebration by large crowds. The completed railroad was standard gauge but with tracks constructed of wooden, usually pine rails, or stringers, laid on oak cross-ties. Stringers were capped with strap iron, in the same fashion as early railroads in northern states. The finished system could transport freight and people from Raleigh to Gaston at average speeds of about 15 miles per hour, but the speeds were lowered by the Chief Engineer, Mr. Charles F. M. Garnett, to about 8 miles per hour because of safety considerations. Passengers were transported by trains such as that shown below. Because of weather exposure and usage, the strap-iron caps would often break and, occasionally, penetrate the floor of the passenger car, causing the train to run off the tracks.

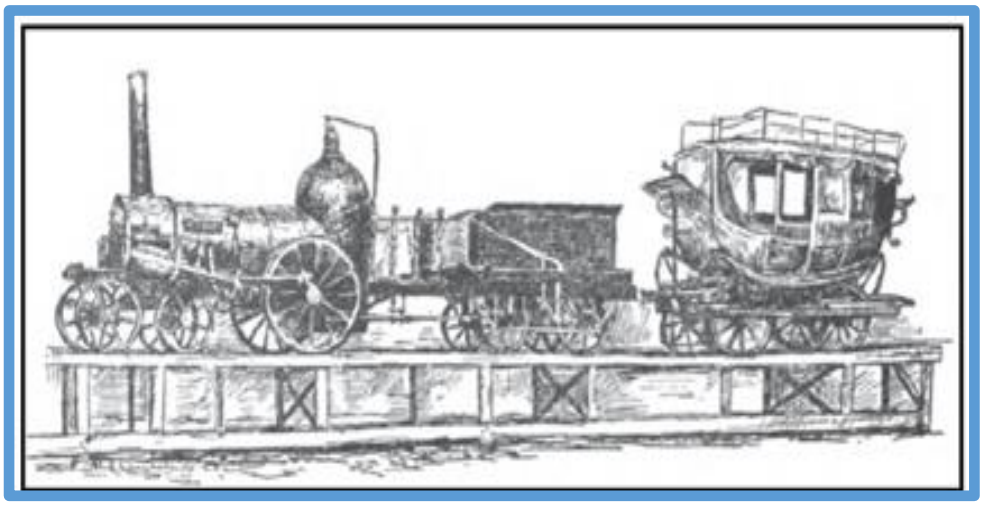

Figure 2. Sketch of first steam locomotive to enter Raleigh in 1840. Named the Tornado, it was not very fast, and not easy to drive. From Wake: Capitol County of North Carolina, see footnote 2.

One of the earliest engineers was Rufus Henry Horton, who described the original engines, like Tornado, as:

> "We had no headlights, no cabs to protect the engineer, no seat for him to sit on, no steam gauge, no blower, no strainer to feed pipe… When we filled the boiler we had to keep running all the time, so as to get pumping force. We couldn't take water standing still…"[2]

By 1845 the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad was sold under foreclosure. As there was no business organization capable of purchasing the line, the state of North Carolina bought the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad, and began the long and formidable task of rebuilding the entire road. In 1853 the road to Weldon was completed, where it connected with other lines. The original rails were also replaced with iron T-shaped rails. By 1858 the railroad owned 14 locomotives.[3]

The Rufus Henry Horton grew up in Wake County and before the railroad was operational, drove the stagecoach from Raleigh to Fayetteville for a while. According to family lore, he began his career with the R&G around 1846 as a fireman, and was promoted to engineer in 1847, about the time when the R&G Chief Engineer purchased four new six-wheel engines, named Tornado, Spitfire, Whirlwind, and Volcano. Rufus became known as Captain Horton, earning a reputation for always being on time, something which was difficult to do in those days.

One of the most famous pictures from that time is shown above of the locomotive Romulus Saunders, one of the new engines, with the railroad president, Dr. William J. Hawkins standing proudly on the engine. Captain Horton is leaning out the window of the cab, Treasurer Major W. W. Vass, on the right, and the son of Captain Horton's fireman, Rufe Smith in the foreground. This picture was thought to be the oldest existing picture of a North Carolina railroad with officials of the R&G posed with an 1850s engine.[5] Captain Horton was apparently a very popular engineer. According to one story, in the late 1850's when Dr. Hawkins was still president, he released Captain Horton because of the saying "he is so popular that the road cannot get along without him," which the President desired to discredit. The dismissal raised so much tumult that the company authorities returned Captain Horton to his post.[6]

It was said in the family that Captain Horton could not read, but his fireman could. The two became a permanent team because they complemented each other so well. Later, when Superintendent Myers was managing the newly created Seaboard Air Line

Railroad, he took Captain Horton off the engineer list because he couldn't read. The superintendent believed that the engineer should read the orders, so Captain Horton was taken off the road, which had been from Raleigh to Portsmouth, Virginia. The company president, Mr. John C. Winder, had the run divided into two parts making one of them from Raleigh to Weldon, and restored Captain Horton to engineer for that part of the line. Mr. Winder's direction was that Captain Horton should have that run because he knew every foot of the road from Raleigh to Weldon. Sometime later, Mr. Myers was on a special trip from Raleigh to Richmond and was afraid he could not make the connections at Weldon. Captain Horton was the engineer and made the 40-mile trip in 36 minutes. In Weldon, Mr. Myers went to Captain Horton, took off his hat, shook his hand, and changed his mind, saying that Captain Horton was one of the best he had ever seen. When he and another engineer were in an accident in Youngsville, by a "remarkable feat as an engineer" he still brought his train into Raleigh on time.[7]

Captain Horton died on 3 March 1909 at the home of his daughter, Margaret Adeline Horton Faison, and her husband, William Andrew Faison at 617 West Jones Street, in Raleigh. He is buried in the old Raleigh City Cemetery; my father and I went looking for his grave one afternoon in 1996 but couldn't find it. According to a survey of the City Cemetery, his actual grave site in the cemetery is unknown. Captain Rufus Henry Horton was my great grandfather, and the William Andrew Faison mentioned above, who was himself an engineer on the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad as well as the following Seaboard Air Line Railroad, was my grandfather. William Andrew Faison's father, Alpheus Carey Faison, was likewise an engineer, but that's another story.

Notes:

1. www.carolana.com/NC/Transportation/railroads/nc_rrs_raleigh_gaston.html. Construction actually began in November of 1836 on the first forty miles of standard gauge track. The first major task was to construct a 1,040-ft. long bridge across the Roanoke River at Gaston, NC in Northampton County, on the north bank. The following year a connection was made at that point with the Greensville & Roanoke Railroad that was operated by the Petersburg Railroad of Virginia. For a more complete version of the R&G start-up, go to the website.
2. WAKE Capital County of North Carolina, Murray, Elizabeth Reid, Volume 1 Prehistory through Centennial, page247., 1983.
3. www.carolana.com/NC/Transportation/railroads/nc_rrs_raleigh_gaston.html. In 1845, R&G was in financial stress and was sold under foreclosure to the state, the only entity that could afford to buy it. The railroad was in such terrible physical condition that a major overhaul was undertaken. The road was extended to Weldon during this period, and the wooden rails were replaced with iron T-rails. More powerful and modern locomotives were bought. The results were all good. The average speed increased to over 25 miles per hour.
4. State Archives of North Carolina, Raleigh, North Carolina. From www.flickr.com/photos/north-carolina-state-archives/32767064854/in/album-72157692506529741/N_53_15_1935_Raleigh & Gaston RR Locomotive with President William Worrell Vass 1850-1960 by State Archives of North Carolina. The picture of the locomotive is widely used in early histories of the railroad and is thought to be the oldest extant picture of any North Carolina locomotive.
5. WAKE Capital County of North Carolina, Murray, Elizabeth Reid, Volume 1 Prehistory through Centennial, page259., 1983.
6. Oldest Engineer Dead, Raleigh News and Observer, Raleigh, NC, 4 March 1909.
7. Ibid. It may seem that being on-time isn't that big a deal, but the original conditions of the railroad tracks, that is, pine rails capped with iron stringers that came loose without warnings causing trains to leave the tracks, primitive engine controls, having to stop for water without losing steam pressure, the high probability of a minor wreck, restricting speeds, plus many other unexpected events and issues could cause unexpected delays. It is not clear exactly how Captain Horton managed to be "on time" often enough to earn his reputation, but he did.

Carey Faison, with the assistance of two cousins, Elizabeth Faison Chenery, and Mary Beth Horton Grady. It took three of us to find the attic- and old office-stored material. Pictures, obituaries, and handwritten notes on the backs of some pictures were what put us on the right path. It's always nice to have family help with putting together something like a story from the mid-1800s.

A Wake County Native Reflects

Robert Philip Upchurch[17]

The Historic Nature of Inwood Baptist Church of Wake County, North Carolina – My Perspective

As developments and cultural shifts dramatically change the character of our rural communities, it becomes ever more important to document institutions put in place going back to the 1800s. I was immersed in the Inwood program starting as a pre-teenager in the mid-1930s in an unusual way. This experience informed my religious journey of a lifetime. Although I left the community at age 16, I returned periodically mentally and physically much as a salmon returns to the stream where it was spawned. There are many reasons for my dedication and concern for Inwood. It is my hope and belief that this epistle will help to define the historic nature of Inwood Baptist Church and its cemetery.

Our Upchurch family connections with Inwood came over five decades before my birth in 1928. It started when my grandfather Bartley Jefferson Upchurch, "Jeff," returned from the Civil War in 1865 to his ancestral home in western Wake County, North Carolina. He shortly moved to a farm in Barton's Creek Township in northern Wake County, NC, which his brother William George Upchurch, "Bill," had purchased to accommodate his destitute relatives, Jeff and two blind siblings and their mother. There in 1869, he married Aurora Olantha Ray and in 1870, their daughter Ellena Judson Upchurch, "Lena," was born. In that same year, Jeff and Bill purchased a 357.5 acre farm bordered on the south by what became known as the Yates Mill/Yates Dairy complex. This area was one of several communities that populated Swift Creek Township.

The history of Swift Creek Township is somewhat misleading. The fact that Yates Mill (formerly Pearson's Mill) was operational as of 1757 might lead one to conclude that as of 1870, the community would have been well populated. Such was not the case. Each community had its own grist mill and there were over 70 in Wake County, each serving a nearby small clientele. In the 1950s, my uncle Gettis Henderson Upchurch told me that as of 1870, there were only two homes between the newly purchased Upchurch plantation called "Woodland" and Raleigh. The land grant records mostly issued in the 1700s in the Swift Creek area were titled to people who soon moved on. A story, too complex to be told here, is that Raleigh businessmen in the early 1800s saw Swift Creek Township land as a good investment. Many tracts purchased in the mid-1800s were acquired from absentee landlords.

Thus was the stage set for the creation of a new entity to serve the community. It was given the name Inwood Baptist Church, it having been formed on February 25, 1877. Anderson Betts was reported as a prime organizer, but records show that others were heavily involved as well. We are fortunate to have the book, Living Stones: A History of Inwood Baptist Church, published by Roger H. Crook in 2000. I will avoid duplicating his work except to point out certain errors or clarifications and to add different impressions arising out of the different resources available to the two of us.

First, I have to stake a claim that the Upchurch family played a major role in the formation of the church and for many decades thereafter. Crook listed 13 who provided letters from sister churches. Among these were three Upchurches – L. L. Upchurch (Lamberth Lassiter Upchurch), A. H. Upchurch (actually Aurora Olantha Upchurch, wife of Jeff), and Mariah Upchurch (sister of Jeff). The organizers swelled to 15 when considering W. G. Upchurch, "Bill," and his brother B. J. Upchurch, "Jeff," (incorrectly shown by Crook as R. J. Upchurch). Thus, five of the 15 movers and shakers were Upchurches. I feel that Lucretia (Mills) Upchurch, mother of Jeff, Bill, Lass and Mariah, was also involved. Lucretia was the first person to be buried in the cemetery, she having died on September 26, 1877.

The one acre donated by Bill and Jeff was taken as a block from the southern boundary of Woodland starting at the intersection of present-day Lake Wheeler Road (then Adkins Road) and present-day Inwood Church Road.[18]

The exact early progression to the formation of Inwood is lost in the mists of time. Most likely a year or two of discussion preceded the 1877 formation. It is quite possible that religious ceremonies were held rotationally in peoples' homes. In my study of the formation of churches, it has often been revealed that females were the true motivators. Of unknown relevance is the fact that Macedonia Methodist Church existed in the area starting in 1854 and being located in the southwest corner of present-day Tryon Road and Mid-Pines Road.

Through a peculiar set of circumstances, I was able in 2008 to learn how Mrs. Bartley Jefferson Upchurch likely influenced the selection of Reverend J. C. Marcom as the first pastor of Inwood. Mrs. B. J. Upchurch was nee Aurora Ray, daughter of Jane Caroline Grady and Buckner Ray. Jane had a sister by the name of Mariah Ann Grady, who was the wife of Rev. James C. Marcom (1814-1889). Of course, it could have been a mere coincidence that my grandmother's uncle became the first pastor of Inwood. It seems more likely that Aurora played some role in recruiting her uncle. There is more to the story. On May 14, 2008, I participated in a field trip of Inwood members to view the gravesite of Rev. J. C. Marcom. It is on private property in western Wake County, quite near Piney Grove Church, which Rev. Martin also served. Our thoughts at the time of moving his remains to Inwood did not materialize.

A few additional comments are in order regarding Crook's chapter one, covering the period 1877-1902. It seems the name of Lamberth Lassiter Upchurch, my blind great uncle, was a challenge to get right. He was correctly portrayed on page three as L. L. Upchurch, a founder. Later on that same page, Crook notes Lamberth Lassiter as a stranger on the plaque, not understanding that he is one and the same as L. L. Upchurch. Later on page nine, S. S. Upchurch is listed as trustee when it should be L. L. Upchurch. On page 14, L. L. Upchurch is incorrectly listed as A. L. Upchurch, and on page 15, he is styled as L. G. Upchurch. These errors are likely due to the way the letter "L" was written in the old days, making interpretation difficult. It is clear that Great Uncle Lass was a key performer in early Inwood in spite of his blindness. Likewise, Jeff Upchurch, his wife Aurora, his mother Lucretia, and his half-sister Mariah were stalwart participants from 1877 onward.

Before concluding comments on chapter one, taking us up to 1902, there are several Upchurch related items to be noted. It is later reported (page 46) that Rev. James L. Martin came on board as pastor beginning on January 26, 1902 and served through 1907. He was welcomed following a period of poor continuity of pastorships. Our Upchurch family records give a different slant to this story. On December 30, 1896, in the church James L. Martin married Eleanor Upchurch, the third child of Jeff Upchurch. We are reliably informed that Martin, prior to 1896, had been a supply pastor for Inwood while attending Wake Forest Seminary. Clearly, Aunt Ellie and Uncle Martin were a part of Inwood likely from 1895 to 1907. Until his death in 1935, he held pastorates in many North Carolina churches and raised and educated five children, all of whom lived away from Inwood. The oldest, Dr. James Martin, Jr., would, upon his passing in 1976, leave a bequest to care for the cemetery.

An important Inwood family resulted when bachelor Miley Perry (1876-1929) moved to the Inwood community and joined the church. In 1900, he married Bessie Estille Upchurch, the number two daughter of Jeff Upchurch. This family would prosper locally. They produced five children, who married in the area, all of whom produced grandchildren. For well over one hundred years, this array has nurtured Inwood Church. Sons-in-law George Strother and Harold D. Wilson were pillars of the church for years. Miley was an exceptional person and a noted singer who performed near and far. He died at age 53 in an auto accident, but left each of his five children a farm. The children of Uncle Miley and Aunt Bessie were my first cousins, and I knew them well and of their deep Inwood involvement.

Another of Jeff's sons, my uncle Frank Jones Upchurch had a daughter Edna Lois Upchurch, who was a life-long member of Inwood. She married Randolph Jeffreys, who became an ordained minister. He was never called on as a pastor at Inwood, but for over 40 years, he did yeoman service as a leader at Inwood. He was a close friend of mine and a mentor.

Jeff's other three daughters, Lena, Maude, and Pat never married, but were life-long members of Inwood and all three played significant roles in the life of the church. The six sons of Jeff were led to the church by their father, but with the exception of Frank, the lesson did not take, other than laying a claim to a spot in the cemetery. Frank's daughter Lois and her husband Randolph Jeffreys, as reported, in later years went on the play major roles at Inwood.

Hopefully, some currently interested parties will help define more clearly the roles, homesites, and more for the major Inwood supporters that appeared in chapter one of Living Stones. O. L. Stringfield and S. O. Wilson are two that cry out for amplification. One of this group that I later came to know well was David Columbus Smith. He is referenced on page 28 as appearing on the roles in the late 1880s. Many of the other early movers and shakers had died or moved on by the time I showed up about 1934 at the age of six.

As will have been noted, my involvement with Inwood existed because of my heritage and family ties. However, my physical appearance at the church for the period of 1934-1944 requires a special explanation. Although my father and mother always lived in the shadow of Inwood, they were not members as I grew up (my mother would be a member many years later). Our poverty was one factor. In any case, my mother decided that her son should not go unchurched. So at age six in 1934, she cleaned me up and dressed me decently and sent me walking to attend Sunday School at Inwood, some 1½ miles cross country. This became a regular Sunday trek for me, and it was expanded to attend Vacation Bible School and Church picnics at Pullen Park.

About the time I started going to Inwood, the church building burned. I recall clearly the amazing revelation that R. W. King pledged $1,000 to the rebuilding. That was a huge sum in that day and in those Depression days. I also recall clearly that the church met in Swift Creek Elementary School while rebuilding took place.

At the church I found a comfort zone. I recall the teachers emphasizing Bible verses and having us make and color little stories on paper. Part of the comfort had to do with the fact that a good percentage of the church members were my kin. As I returned home, I would often stop by Jeff's plantation house where three bachelor uncles and three old maid aunts lived. They treated me kindly. I matured somewhat in the church environment. I observed the leaders in operation – H. P. Greene, Harold Wilson, R. W. King, George Strother, Leon Strother, and more. In due course, Rand Jeffreys was the teacher for young boys. I remember one occasion when he allowed a robust discussion, which went beyond our class period. There was some embarrassment as we trooped into the main sanctuary interrupting the sermon in progress.

There came a time when I felt overwhelmed during a sermon. The words resonated, and the song was one I shall remember all my days, "Have Thine Own Way Lord." This epiphany has never left me, although I did not, in fact, become a member at Inwood.

My participation at Inwood was truncated in 1944, as I dropped out of high school after only three years and took a full-time job at North Carolina State College (now North Carolina State University). Then in December 1944, I actually entered the college, living on campus. From that point on, I would visit Inwood only sporadically, mostly for funerals.

However, in the 1970s, I became immersed in family history of the entire Upchurch family. A small segment of this interest led me to study Inwood and the community from a new perspective. Over the years, this has led to several interventions at Inwood.

On one of these occasions, I was invited to give a sermon at Inwood. In it I told the story of my family and the church and of my appreciation for the seminal role that it played in my life. I was joined in the service by the Upchurch descendants who were musicians. Rebecca Bradley, a granddaughter of the Rev. James Martin, Sr. played the violin. Karrie (Brown) Rushing, a great granddaughter of Frank Jones Upchurch sang a solo. This event was held on the evening of Sunday, June 13, 2010. The formal service attended by about 80 people was preceded by a dinner in the church hall, attended by about 50 people. At the time, Inwood was not exactly booming, but it seemed OK. Little did I grasp that troubled waters lay ahead.

From 2011 onward, my periodic calls to Inwood members of the old school revealed that there was angst in the church. In some ways the fact of the church failing to grow seemed peculiar. They had a lovely modern facility, and the population of the area continued to grow rapidly. It is strange how some churches prosper and some do not. As the downward spiral continued, I learned, in due course, that the church had fallen under a pastor who proclaimed that his authority was total. His game plan was totally without merit, but he had key deacons in his fold. Naturally, people began to leave the church and few joined. There came a time when there were not enough paying members to accommodate the expenses. The church was essentially facing bankruptcy.

It was at this juncture that a growing community church with several campuses named the Pointe Church appeared on the scene. They offered to merge with Inwood at no cost and to assume all assets and liabilities. A meeting of the Inwood membership took place in December 2015, attended by 40 members. All but seven or eight voted for the merger.

This arrangement could have worked out well, but it did not. Basically, Inwood Church disappeared and in its place a different kind of entity appeared. I happened to be in North Carolina in May 2016 when the Pointe Church had their first service on their new “South Campus.” The legacy of Inwood was not to be seen or heard.

Some descendants of long ago members of Inwood are now contesting legally the arrangements that unfolded. They have a number of concerns including the prospects that the Inwood Historic Cemetery will not be well served. The outcome of this litigation and negotiation is yet to be resolved.

Aside from these issues, Allied Families is engaged in annotating the Inwood Cemetery and putting it online. Carla Jordon Michaels, lead coordinator of the Allied Families Cary, North Carolina Facility, is spearheading this effort. I have been delighted to learn that she and I have mutual interests in Inwood going back to the earliest days.

In Inwood Cemetery rest my parents, my aunts and uncles, my grandparents, and my great grandparents. They are accompanied by dozens of cousins and other blood kin. In this historic cemetery, the heritage of those interred tell the story of a community of long ago. This story is a significant part of my heritage and I pray that it does not fall from view, ever.

This photo of the Inwood Church is the first one built to serve the Church formed in 1877, but the date of construction is not known. Apparently the old building has been retained as an adjunct. I cannot tell if the old structure was moved so the new larger sanctuary could face the road, or if it was left in place and the new part added to the south side of the old building. This is that complex that burned in 1935 following which a new brick building was constructed. It still serves but a grand new structure was added. All four versions are shown on the back cover of the book. The grand new structure was competed in 1998.
